THE STRUCTURE OF THE MASS:

At the front of the Roman Missal is an extensive explanation called the General Instruction of the Roman Missal (GIRM). This text explains the theology and the practical applications of the parts of the Mass. It is well worth reading in full.

One of the interesting elements is that pausing for silent prayer is an essential element which is deliberately built into the different parts of the Mass. I am not speaking here of silence prior to mass or afterwards, of which I have spoken in a previous article, but this time I mean that there are definite times within the Eucharist that silent prayer and reflection is actually intended.

The General Instruction says:-

“Sacred silence also, as part of the celebration, is to be observed at the designated times...So, within the Act of Penitence and again after the invitation to pray, all recollect themselves; but at the conclusion of a reading or the Homily, all meditate briefly on what they have heard; then after Communion, they praise and pray to God in their hearts. (Para 45)

“....The Liturgy of the Word is to be celebrated in such a way as to promote meditation, and so any sort of haste that hinders recollection must clearly be avoided. During the Liturgy of the Word, it is also appropriate to include brief periods of silence, adapted to the gathered assembly, in which, at the prompting of the Holy Spirit, the word of God may be grasped by the heart and a response through prayer may be prepared. (Para 56).”

So, in summary, within Eucharist there are intended to be quite conscious pauses for silence in which each person individually prays in their heart for moments.

Whenever the priest says “let us pray,” he then pauses, as the assembly prays silently for some moments. After each reading there should also be a short pause for silence, to allow the Word of God to enter us deeply. After the homily, there is a pause for silent reflection. In the Prayer of the Faithful, the reader proposes a particular intention and then pauses for several seconds to allow people to silently pray for that named intention, followed by the reader finishing the proposed intention by saying “Lord hear us.”

The prayer of Faithful is possibly one of the most misunderstood prayers, in that it is the assembly which prays the intention, not the reader. The prayer format carefully resembles suggestions rather than any direct address to God by the reader.

After communion, we silently pray in appreciation to God.

Silence is as central to the structure of mass as the other parts. If each part of the mass moves swiftly from one part to the next without these pauses, it is like gulping down a huge seven course meal in one hurried gulp.
